Short Bio: Growing up, I played all sports and enjoyed all of them. I played soccer at Skyline high School in the 1970's and throughly enjoyed the sport. I have coached many soccer teams over the years (over 50 different teams), involving my son's, daughter's, and now grandchhildren's teams. Having coached all levels of soccer, from 4 year olds to high school age, I know the importance of coaching to the player's level, and setting expectations that are acheivable for their particular level. Teaching teamwork, individual skills, and game knowledge are all important to me. Winning is important, but not at the expense of good sportmanship, integrity, and compromising one's values. I expect our players to try hard, do their best, and never quit. And I recognize that there are more important things in life than soccer. As a team, we work together and pull for each other. Whether we win or lose, I hope that our players will always enjoy the game and be satisfied with their effort.
