"Soccer interest in the US has grown tremendously. You could tell by the fan response during our summer tour and rising interest in Bayern around the US. We are here to engage those fans and to help continue to grow the sport through grassroots initiatives like our youth partnership with GPS."

BIO

Paul Breitner (born 5 September 1951 in Kolbermoor, Bavaria) is a former professional German footballer. One of Germany's most celebrated players, he earned 48 caps for West Germany. He was known for his partnerships with Franz Beckenbauer and Bertie Vogts in defence for the German national team, and his midfield combination with Karl-Heinz Rummenigge for Bayern.

Breitner was an integral part of the West Germany team that won the 1974 FIFA World Cup, scoring in the final. He also scored in the final of the 1982 World Cup, making him one of only four players to have scored in two different World Cup final matches, the others being Pelé, Vavá and Zinédine Zidane.

One of the greatest German players of all time, Breitner was named in the FIFA World Cup All-Time Team and was named by Pelé one of the top 125 greatest living footballers at a FIFA Awards ceremony in 2004.

FC Bayern and GPS - A partnership for the future of youth development in the US

In November of 2014, FC Bayern Munich and Global Premier Soccer (GPS) announced an extensive partnership that will bring the knowledge and experience of Bayern's famed Youth Academy to the United States.

The grassroots initiative is a major step in FC Bayern's commitment to engage the wider US soccer community. As part of the partnership, FC Bayern will provide GPS with its development knowledge, including its coaches, curriculum, official uniforms, and most importantly, the principles and culture of what has made them so successful.

Through the partnership with GPS, FC Bayern coaches will be in the US on a regular basis to facilitate a real know-how transfer as well as provide ongoing access to Bayern's Youth Academy curriculum.

FC Bayern will also establish Player Identification Programs throughout the US to identify players that will go on trial in Germany every summer.

Since the announcement, the partnership is already well underway with both parties having recently visited each other's facilities, beginning with GPS's visit to Bayern Munich's Youth Academy in late November. During the comprehensive three-day workshop, GPS staff were hosted by FC Bayern's Academy Directors Wolfgang Dremmler and Michael Tarnat. Shortly after, in early December, U16 FC Bayern Head Coach, Sebastian Dremmler and Chief Scout, Jurgen Jung, in turn visited two of GPS's northern states in early December.

FC BAYERN AFFILIATE PROGRAM

In conjunction with GPS, FC Bayern will be providing opportunities for select clubs in the US to become FC Bayern affiliates.

NSCAA CONVENTION

'Developing World Champions - FC Bayern's Philosophy'

January 15 2015
3.45pm - 4.45pm, Section (CC 113A)

PEP GUARDIOLA HEAD COACH, FC BAYERN

PEP GUARDIOLA'S 5 CORRIDORS

Field is divided into 5 lanes of roughly equal length. Guardiola uses the corridors as an organizational structure, as instruments players can use in games to execute various tactical ideas.

A.

In scenario A, the outer and inner left corridors are used to effectively position players building out of the back and to recover after losing the ball. The fundamental idea is that winger and fullback from same side can't ever be in same corridor.

Depending on position central defender takes up (here Boateng plays out the back in far left corridor), the fullback and winger on his side must position themselves in one or other available lanes.

The idea is that if the central defender is moving open, fullback should be in next door lane inside (Lahm above), and winger in the wide lane, outside (Ribery above), so that ball can be passed directly to him. If you achieve a wide pass directly to winger you've bypassed opponent's entire midfield. If ball is lost, then fullback is inside and can close down space immediately.

B.

Illustrated in scenario B is the interchangeability in attacking patterns. Part of Guardiola's strategy is to "force opposition's plans to change via your own actions, to shake up their organizational structure." Again, the corridors serve as template for tactical repositioning of players attacking a defense.

Above, the forward (Lewandowski) moves out of the center into the wide right corridor, dragging with him the following opposition defender. In turn, the attacking right winger (Müller cuts inside to attack the vacated space in the middle.

PHILOSOPHY

For the last five years, Pep Guardiola has captivated soccer fans around the world with his exciting and unique style of play. Intricate, quick-passing, technical and possession and attack-minded soccer has become synonymous with Guardiola's soccer philosophy, and that influence has very much been visible at FC Bayern since taking over as head coach in 2013.

At FC Bayern's training grounds at the Säbener Strasse in Munich, Guardiola's intense and meticulous mind is on full display during the team's training sessions. They are as demanding as they are rewarding. Player's legs are trained as much as are their minds. The team takes to the training pitch at least five times a week and sometimes twice a day with morning and late afternoon sessions. Regenerative sessions are also a part of the repertoire after games with individual attention to players' tactical roles and positions.

On matchday, FC Bayern let the ball do the talking, and in training it's much of the same. Guardiola prefers his players to train with the ball as much as possible and emphasizes technique in his drills. Fundamental to Guardiola's philosophy is a player's ability to react and adjust to different in-match situations. Therefore, tactical understanding and technical execution are key to the development of his style of play.
